

In each node of the binary search tree, instead of storing a single key value (which makes duplicate keys not possible), we store a pointer to an array, vector, linked list, etc. When we are trying to insert a duplicate key into the tree, we can simply add the duplicate item to the end of the array/linked list. And this will work with any type of object since array/vector/linked list can be used for storing any type of object.