

We will expect Quicksort and Mergesort to benefit from parallelism. Both algorithms are “divide and conquer” algorithms, and after the array is divided into small factions, sorting each fraction is an embarrassingly parallel problem and can be solved independently. With multi-core processors, we can divide the sub-problems to different cores and save time by running the cores in parallel.